REFERENCE LETTER FOR JAIME SANDOVAL RICAÑO

To the Admissions Committee,

I am the Chief Executive Officer of TAQ Pte Ltd, a biotechnology company specialising in healthcare management and green technologies. Through an educational consultancy with Bluesky Education (<https://bluesky-education.com/>), I taught Jaime over two weeks on a Green Technology programme in Singapore. In that time I had ample opportunity to observe his character, his working habits and his instincts as a student and as a young man. Two weeks is a short period, but it is long enough to tell apart the student who works from the student who merely attends. Jaime stood out from the first day.

What struck me first was his entrepreneurial ability. Unlike most students of his age, he does not wait to be given a task. He identifies an opportunity and builds something around it. He founded the Smart Finance student organisation at his campus, and he hosts a financial education podcast in which he interviews finance executives, entrepreneurs and university professors. During the programme in Singapore he took the initiative to arrange and conduct interviews with business leaders and with Business Administration students from the National University of Singapore, entirely on his own steam. These were not assignments handed to him. They were ventures he conceived, organised and saw through, and they show a rare willingness to place himself before experienced people and hold his own. A university would find him building in the same way within its own community.

His leadership is of the quiet, dependable kind. Within the group he took responsibility naturally for organisation and for carrying others along with him, and he did so without needing to be the loudest voice in the room. He is equally comfortable leading his peers and learning from those far more senior than himself, an unusual balance in a student still in high school. He works with great efficiency, and sees potential and opportunity at a standard well above his peers. His TikTok channel (<https://www.tiktok.com/@smart.financee>) is clear evidence of this. Where other students from Mexico complete their studies and tour Singapore, Jaime seized the opportunity to build cultural awareness of Singapore and its people, offering reflections that were both thoughtful and mature.

I would also draw attention to the exceptional care and creativity he brings to his work. Everything he produces is thoughtfully planned, well researched and properly finished, as both his TikTok channel and his personal website curriculum vitae show. His particular strength, and that of his emerging generation, is the skilful use of modern digital and social technologies to make financial education accessible to a very large audience of young people. The quality of that content reflects a commitment, industry and thoughtfulness beyond his years, and it sets him apart from his Mexican peers and from Singaporean students alike. The ability to combine a technical understanding of a subject with the communication skills to reach thousands of people is precisely the skill set that modern enterprise and modern academic communication badly need. Professors would find his talent for bringing academic education to a mass audience extremely useful.

His travels to Japan and to Singapore have given him considerable international experience. He absorbed the cultures of Asia and the standards of work and living excellence of both countries. We observed that he integrated with the people here with genuine ease, venturing beyond his own circle and seizing opportunities to form strong relationships. He conducted himself with maturity, professionalism and courtesy throughout, and he gave his time willingly to community and environmental work, including a beach cleaning project during his stay. In him we observed strong intelligence together with inclusivity and an appreciation of diversity, qualities that are rare at his age and that make him, in my assessment, a potentially very strong young entrepreneur. That same excellence carried him and his teammates to an award at the GreenTech Summit 2026, in competition against students from Taiwan and Russia.

Would he be able to cope with the demands of a university course? I have no doubt of it. He maintains a strong academic record at Tecnológico de Monterrey, is working through the Bloomberg Market Concepts and CFA Institute certifications on his own initiative, and works comfortably in Spanish, English and French. What he has already achieved without institutional support indicates clearly what he will achieve with it. Given the strong support and mentorship of a good university, he would acquire the academic rigour and the technical skills to convert his natural entrepreneurial instincts into significant impact in whichever field he chooses.

It is with confidence that I recommend Jaime Sandoval Ricaño for admission, and I am glad to act as his referee.
